The higher senses and the phenomenon of fear and anxiety

Thursday, 4 January to Sunday, 7 January 2018

Medical Section

Goetheanum

Dear Colleagues,

We warmly invite you to our 20th international specialist conference on art therapy. The conference will continue with the subject of the twelve senses: whereas at the last conference we concerned ourselves intensively with the middle senses, with their role as mediators in art, we now intend to deal with the higher senses and their relationship with fear and anxiety. We would like to look at the role of the higher senses in the context of interpersonal encounters and in so doing deal with the interaction between encounter and fear and anxiety. At a superior level, the relationship between the higher and the lower, physically bound senses is of interest.

When does the phenomenon of fear and anxiety arise in healthy people and place such a strain on the senses that it becomes overwhelming? How do we include the higher senses in therapy? How are the higher senses revealed to us in the artistic and therapeutic process? We aim this year to ask these and other research and study questions in a concentrated work context. There will be a lecture each morning which will then be taken up in seminar groups by the respective lecturer from the perspective of our understanding of the human being, used to stimulate discussion and be individually deepened and supplemented, also through examples for practising.

There will then be more intensive practical study in the approx. three-hour long workshops in the afternoon. They will also seek to relate to the morning lecture and deepen, it using case studies, from the perspective of art therapy, including how to manage diseases. The evenings, too, will be devoted to the subject in interesting lectures. On Saturday, we intend to give the evening a more festive character with everyone and celebrate the 20th conference together. There will be an opportunity for short presentations from the workshops; we would also additionally welcome cultural contributions from all over the world, such as for example a song, or a dance, or a speech presentation/sketch, or ..., or ..., or Anyone with an idea is hereby warmly invited to tell us about it (email johanna.gunkel@nonsenso.de by 15 December 2017)!

We look forward to seeing you again, or meeting you for the first time, and send our very warm regards!

Interdisciplinary lecture follow-up in seminar groups

Thursday 11.45–13.00, Friday, Saturday 11.15–13.00

The morning lecture will be followed up in interdisciplinary conversation and deepened and extended through the anthroposophical understanding of the human being on the basis of the specific professional experience of each lecturer.

1. Sound, word, thought and the I in the painted picture. Using colour pictures painted by ourselves, we aim to perceive, experience and understand experimentally how and whether what we hear, speak, think and an “I” can be revealed in pictures. Heike Stenz, art therapist (BA), Arlesheim, CH (German, French)

2. Follow-up seminar to work on the common thread of the lecture and its embeddedness in the anthroposophical understanding of the human being, with a phenomenological and epistemological focus; visualisation with blackboard drawings as required. Methods: discussion, perceptual exercises as required. Prof. Dr. Johannes Wagemann, consciousness researcher, higher education lecturer, Mannheim, DE (German, English)

3. Active listening, vocalisation, thinking, perception of the I through creative speech exercises. Grasping, making available, deepening the content of the lecture in a disciplined way with systematic exercises. That is our goal. Rüdiger Reichle, teacher, lecturer, Everswinkel, DE; Kirstin Kaiser, therapeutic creative speech practitioner, Basel, CH (German)

4. How can the seven life processes enable us to work with the higher senses? We will explore the theme artistically and try to understand the obstacles that hinder us when we meet the other. Maria Albiez, art therapist, West Hoathly, UK; Marion Green, art psychotherapist, Stroud, UK (English)

5. Joint recapitulation and supplementation: content, style and conceptual development. Search for the essence of and personal relationship with the lecture (optionally using artistic means). The joint discussion is intended to help better to understand what has been said, to complete it and make it our own. Rico Queißer, art therapist (FH), Waldorf teacher, Witten, DE (German)

6. The musical element and the senses. In the follow-up group we will work phenomenologically on elements of music therapy: perception, feeling, experience. Anne Margreet Muller, music therapist, Oudemolen, NL (German, English, Dutch)

7. We will deepen the morning lectures through painting experiences individually, in pairs and all together. Patrizia Anderle, physician, Padua, IT (English, Italian)

8. We will pick up on the morning lectures together; in doing so, we will also deepen aspects of maintaining the health of the therapist. Uncertainty can lead to anxiety: “Did I hear it properly, take it in properly, understand it properly in order to perceive the patient properly?” Developing sensitivity in dealing with these questions will also be practised with elements of eurhythm. Dr Kaspar H. Jaggi, physician; Jegenstorf, CH; Barbara Jaggi-Sidler, eurhythmist, curative education teacher, adult education teacher, Jegenstorf, CH (German)

9. SABAH-AL-KHEIR. Welcoming the unfamiliar and working with it is both a challenge and an opportunity in the work with people from war and crisis zones. How and to what extent is that possible? In this regard: artistic exercises, forum and discussion on questions and difficulties arising from working with refugees, becoming acquainted with possible future work fields. Petra Rosenkranz, painter, cultural education teacher, Bornheim, DE (German, English)

10. Exercise paths and meditation in art therapy. A practising seminar group. The basis of our work is shaped by:

1. An artistically meditative point of entry. 2. Questions and experiences of participants. 3. Conversation, starting from the question: what possibilities to orientate ourselves do we experience through the anthroposophical path of schooling in coming to terms with threshold experiences? Thomas Adam, singer, singing therapist, Bochum, DE; Dagmar von Freytag-Loringhoven, art therapist for painting/sculpture, Filderstadt, DE; Ulrike Gerharz, speech-art therapist, Karlsruhe, DE (German, English)

Workshops

Thursday, Friday, Saturday 15.00–18.00

11. Metal colour light therapy – what light qualities accompany us? Metals, colours and light transform the anxieties, fears and traumatic experiences which have become fixed in body and soul into new strength. Perceptual exercises on the language of light, painting exercises, discussion about perception and effect. Case studies / research / MCLT training (start August 2018). Friedlinde Meier, metal colour light therapist / eurythmy therapist; Schwörstadt, DE. Hazel Adams, art therapy / MCLT; Bristol, UK. Christine Loser, art therapy / MCLT, Järna, SE (German, English, Swedish)

12. Between impression and expression in the higher senses in discussion and sculptural work. The higher senses work primarily in a connective way and by their nature are very closely connected with understanding and cognition. Thus the impression from the environment and the expression of other people play a big role in them. We intend to pursue this in the course through sculptural exercises and in discussion. Ulrikke Stokholm, trainer and member of the leadership collegium of the Sculptural Creative Courses, Hochwald, CH; Prof. Dr med. Urs Pohlmann, physician, Alfter, DE (German)

13. “... there can be no you without an I, because without an I there can be no facing the other, no encounter.” We will practise perception of the self and the other in the process of working with clay. Clay yields without giving itself up; in this process all the senses are sensitised so that our own processes can also be stimulated. Sculpting offers the possibility of intercultural work with “hands and feet”. Silke Speckenmeyer, sculptor, art therapist, Cologne, DE (German)

14. The path of colour as a tool of the higher senses for the treatment of fear. We have identified four primary fears: changing, being born, dying and living. Such fears are related to the four fundamental organs and constitute, along with various degrees of insecurity, the roots of anxiety. The pictorial exercises from the Stella Maris method are valuable tools for supporting the development of the higher senses. Carla Borri, art therapist, Bologna, IT; Angelo Antonio Fierro, physician, Bologna, IT (English, Italian)

— Subject to change —

15. Trust in the concrete nature of the laws of colour as a remedy for fear and anxiety. The “head study” as an image of the pensive human being. Colours from a therapeutic aspect and the perspective of knowledge of the human being, using Rudolf Steiner’s training motifs for painters. Caroline Chanter, painter, art therapist, Dornach, CH (German, English)

16. Form drawing – drawers form. Without preconditions, therapeutic form drawing offers sustainable opportunities for strengthening the lower senses which are thus available as a reinforced foundation for the higher senses. Intensive practice sharpens the perception and awakens interest in the world. Targeted exercises e.g. for spatial orientation help to enhance security in life. Peter Büchi, form drawing practitioner, adult education teacher, Stäfa, CH (German, English, French)

17. Making sense of the senseless. Many people come to art therapy to make sense of their lives. When life appears meaningless we become sick. Our higher senses working in harmony with our lower and middle senses enable us to find meaning in existence. The Russian story of Vassilisa the Beautiful, which reveals archetypal images of our time, will be at the heart of our workshop. Karin Jarman, art therapist, Stroud, GB; Pia Poulsen, singing therapist, Stroud, UK (English)

18. Taking words for a walk – eavesdropping on the essence, we hear meaning ... What are pending steps on our path of schooling? Listening to, reading and writing poetry goes hand in hand with image creation and observation. Individual spaces for encounter are created in which self-assurance, world connectedness and possibly the letting go of fear and anxiety can make themselves felt. Dr phil. Simone Gaiss, art therapist, art teacher, Munich, DE (German)

19. Integrative treatment concepts for diseases of the respiratory system. The foundations of the respiratory process and respiratory rhythm in medicine and in our understanding of the human being – taking particular account of the higher senses and the musical auditory experience. We will focus our reflections on the symptoms of shortness of breath and anxiety and possibilities of treating them with music and singing therapy. Dr med. Christof Schnürer, physician, Badenweiler, DE; Viola Heckel MA, music and singing therapist, anthroposophic art therapy BVAKT/SVAKT, Klinik Arlesheim AG, CH (German)

20. I and you? Encountering the being of the other? Anxiety and joy in therapy. Anxiety and fear threaten the activity of the I – joy leads to expansion and release. How can art therapy work be structured with regard to the “higher” senses? Discussion and practical work with dry colours. If desired, with case reports from trauma work and adolescent psychiatry.

Dagmar von Freytag-Loringhoven, art therapist (MA), supervisor, art therapist in adolescent psychiatry, teaching, Filderstadt, DE; Jelena Kuhac-Odenwald, anthroposophic art therapist, trauma therapist, Vareš, Bosnia-Herzegovina (German, English)

21. “Our greatest fears are the dragons who hold our deepest treasures.” (Rainer Maria Rilke). Speech and trust exercises: listening to (trust in God), speaking with (certainty in Christ), thinking for (experience in the Spirit). Helga Bläuel, art therapist/painting, Mauerbach, AT; Helmut Raimund, actor and director, speech therapist, social therapist, festival planning, Aberdeen, UK (German)

22. The nature of thoughts, the higher and lower senses, experiences in creative speech and music therapy. Our everyday experience of thinking is of “thoughts flitting about”. Actions of “adversary spirits” can be found in the language development of humanity, produce illusions and untruths and thus form the basis for an experience of fear or anxiety. Listening at the various levels extending as far as the perception of the I is the basic social phenomenon. Harald Haas, psychiatrist and psychotherapist, Bern, Switzerland; Anna-Barbara Hess, art therapist (ED), specialist in music therapy, Schafisheim, Switzerland; Kirstin Kaiser, therapeutic speech practitioner, Basel, CH (German)

23. Light-dark and colour. Therapeutic painting work with light-dark and colour in connection with the higher, middle and lower human being. Joost Groot, painting therapist, Wädenswil, CH; Marjo van der Himst, therapeutic creative speech, The Hague, NL (German, English, Dutch)
